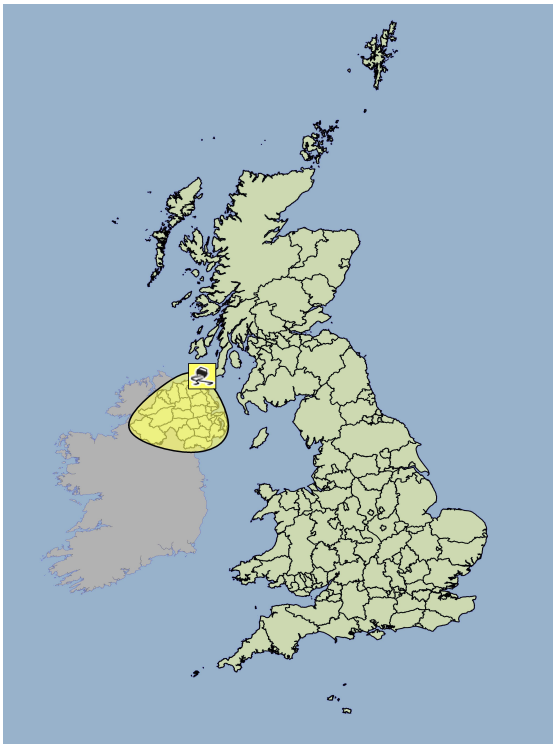
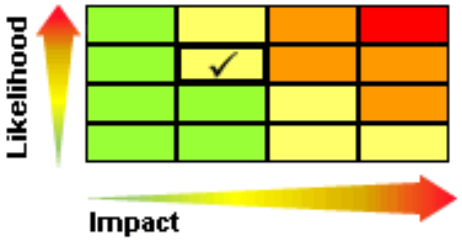
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Bands of showers will move east across Northern Ireland during Monday evening and the first part of the night. Clearing skies will follow later in the night with the likelihood of temperatures falling below zero on some roads with the attendant risk of ice on untreated surfaces.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 02:00 on Tue, 04th Mar 2014 until 09:00 on Tue, 04th Mar 2014

Bands of showers moving east across Northern Ireland during Monday evening and the first part of the night will clear away later. Clearing skies will then lead to a touch of frost and icy stretches on untreated wet surfaces.

The public should be aware of the potential for difficult driving conditions.
